

Model Of New Shawneetown And Its Designer

MARY LONG WHITMORE, left, former Paducahan, made the drawings and a miniature scale model (above) for the new Shawneetown, Ill., which soon will begin to rise on the high ground three miles from the present city. Shawneetown was under 30 to 35 feet of water in the flood last January. The state of Illinois and the federal government are providing the funds necessary for removing the city to the new site. (Cut courtesy of St. Louis Post-Dispatch).

Bituminous Coal Commission to take the first major step toward establishing minimum prices.

They presented to members of the commission their arguments on classification of coal produced in the various fields by site, heating content and accessibility to markets.

The old coal commission, overthrown by a Supreme Court decision holding the original Quinby Act unconstitutional, completed considerable classification work. If the old classifications, never made public, are acceptable now, commission members said, the task of setting rates for different types of coal hear a discordant shriek that startles you for a moment. Then all is the same again—the heat and the interminable trills of the cicadas.

What has happened? One of nature's tragedies. A cicada has been surprised by a cicada-killer, has fled shrieking away, and in all probability has been caught and stung, not to death, but into a state of complete helplessness.

The cicada-killer is one of the largest and most conspicuous, as well as one of the commonest, of burrowing wasps. To many people it is known as a hornet—in fact, the hornet—and is much feared. But it is not at all aggressive. It re-

Clipped By:

julia_bachrach
Sun, Feb 21, 2021